Podcast partner pitch three drafts.

Three ways of putting the same offer to a podcast host. We send each to an even share of the list and keep the one that gets the most replies. Drafted 24 October 2026.

The same in all three

- A free report on their business. The same report customers pay $499 for.
- Half of every report their listeners buy: $250 a report, paid out through Stripe.
- A code for their listeners, worth {discount} off.
- One next step: reply with your website.
- The footer: an unsubscribe link, our postal address, and where we found their email (their podcast feed).

What changes

VERSION	SOUNDS LIKE	THE VISUAL
A · Personal	Ethan writing to one host. It opens with a line about their show.	One image: the cover of the sample report.
B · Corporate	Free the Desk announcing a partner program. It leads with the brand and the numbers.	A designed email: hero, figures, three steps, report preview.
C · The report	A report written about their podcast, laid out like one of ours.	The email is the sample. It shows the product while pitching it.

Still to settle

- Does the $250 repeat? These drafts follow "every report sold", so a listener on monthly reports pays the host every month. If it is the first report only, versions B and C change one line each.
- The listener discount. Shown as {discount}. $50 was the suggestion.
- The sending address and the postal address for the footer: the marketing email from the side note.

VERSION A

Personal

SUBJECT LINES

1. A free SEO report for {business}
2. Quick one about {podcast}
3. $250 a report for {podcast}

WHY IT MIGHT WIN

It reads like one person writing to another, and people reply to people. The free report comes before the money, so it doesn't open like an ad.

Subject: A free SEO report for {business}

Hi {first name},

{One true line about their show}, e.g. Came across your episode on pricing jobs. The bit about quoting by the hour stuck with me.

I'm Ethan. I run Free the Desk in Perth. We make SEO reports for small businesses: where they show up on Google and in AI answers, who's beating them, and the few changes worth making first. Your listeners are exactly who they're for.

I'd like to offer you two things:

> A free report on your business. Send me your website and I'll make one, no strings. It's the same report customers pay $499 for.
>
> $250 for every report your listeners buy. You get a code, your listeners get {discount} off, and you get half of every report. Paid out through Stripe.

VERSION B

Corporate

B

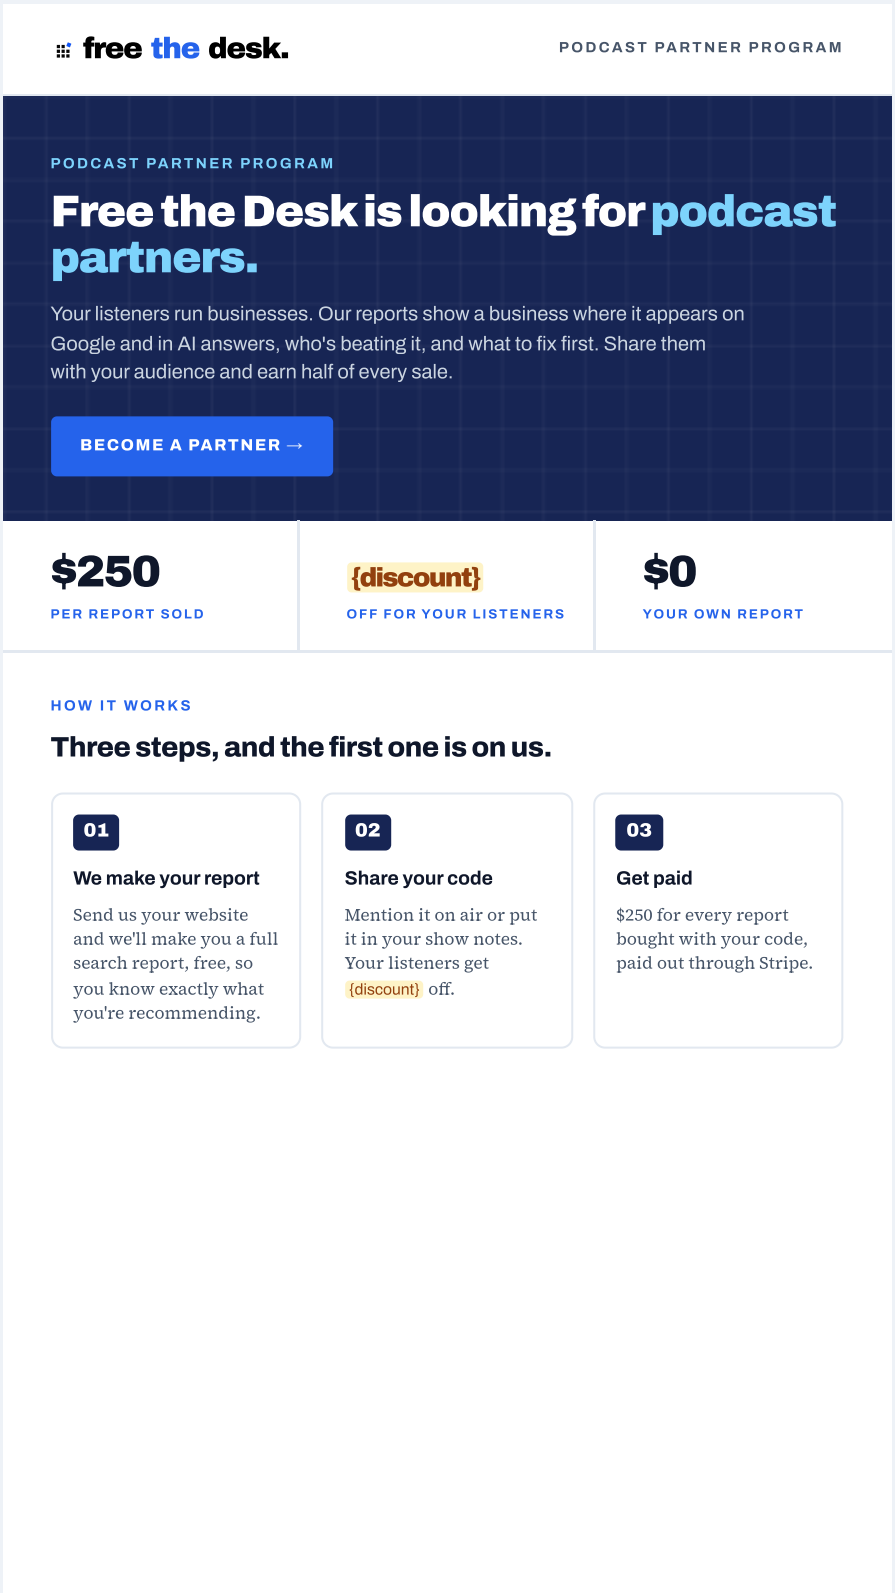

SUBJECT LINES

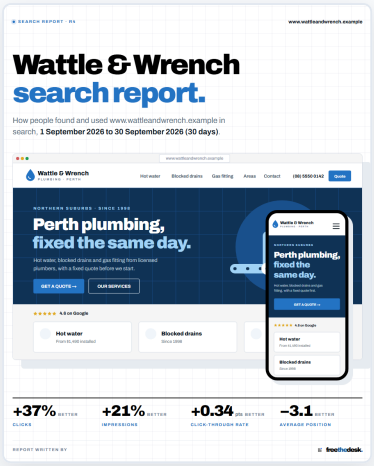

1. The Free the Desk podcast partner program
2. An invitation for {podcast}
3. {podcast} × Free the Desk

WHY IT MIGHT WIN

A program sounds established and safe to put your name to. The numbers are visible before anyone reads a sentence. Sent from Free the Desk, not from a person.

Preview text: A free SEO report for {podcast}, and $250 for every report your listeners buy.

WHAT YOUR LISTENERS GET

A report they can act on.

- ✓ Where they show up on Google and in AI answers
- ✓ Who's beating them, and why
- ✓ The changes worth making first, in order

VERSION C

The report

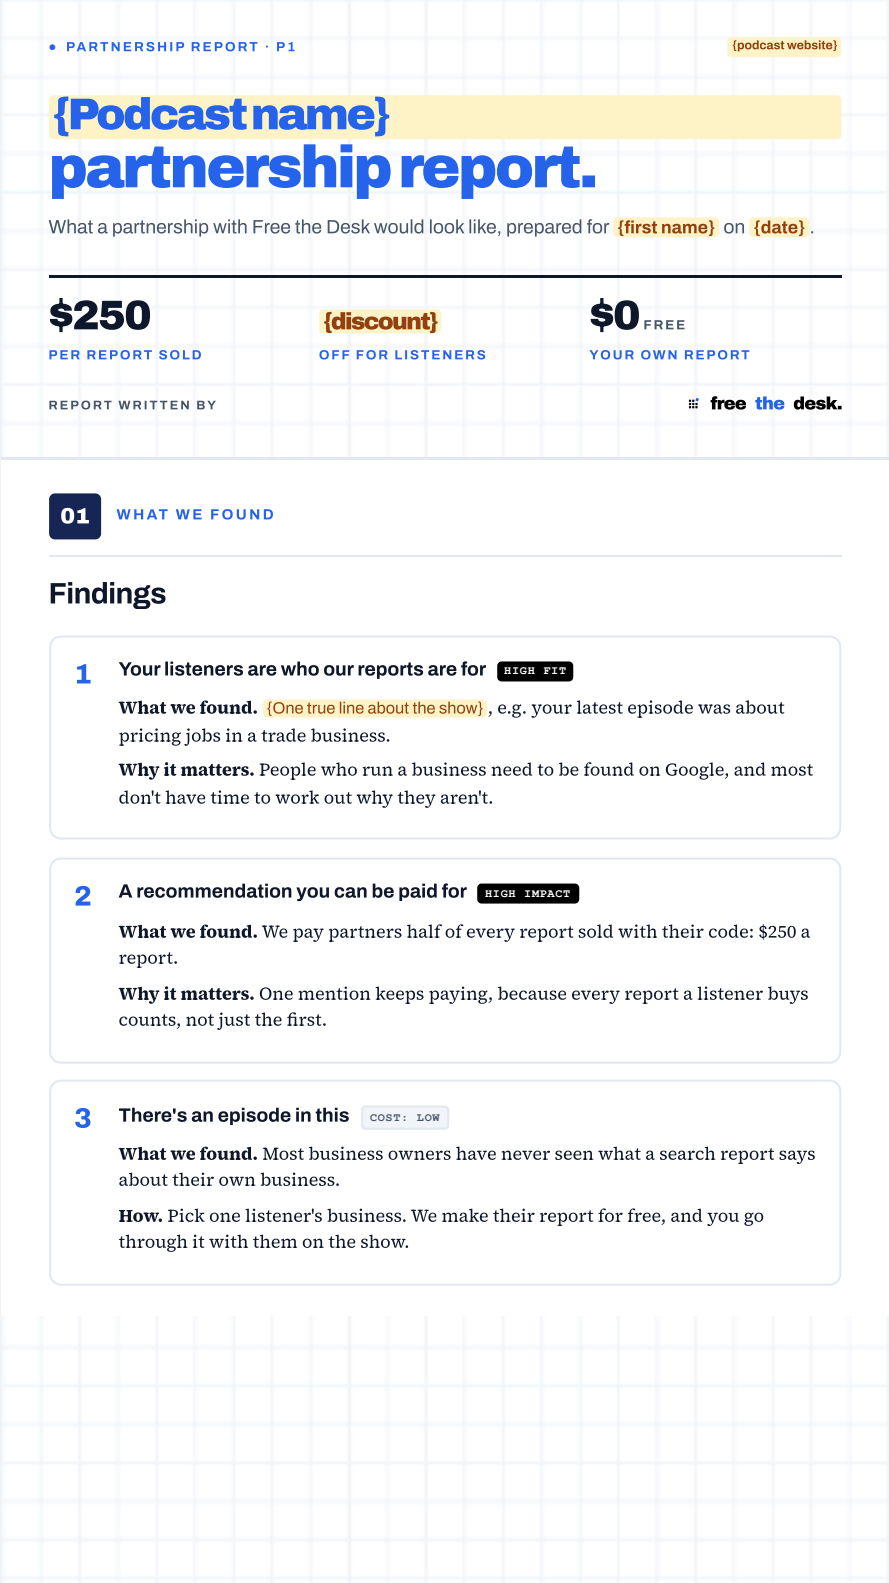

C

SUBJECT LINES

1. We wrote a report on {podcast}
2. {podcast} : partnership report
3. 3 findings for {podcast}

WHY IT MIGHT WIN

Nobody else pitches like this. The subject line is hard not to open, and the layout is the product, so the host has seen a report before they've read a word about one. It also adds the episode idea.
